

Page 1. Paragraph 1: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 1 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 2: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 2 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 3: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 3 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 4: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 4 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 5: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 5 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 6: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 6 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 7: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 7 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 8: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 8 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Page 2. Paragraph 9: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 9 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 10: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 10 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 11: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 11 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 12: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 12 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 13: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 13 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 14: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 14 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 15: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 15 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 16: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 16 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Page 3. Paragraph 17: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 17 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 18: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 18 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 19: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 19 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 20: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 20 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 21: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 21 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 22: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 22 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 23: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 23 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 24: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 24 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Page 4. Paragraph 25: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 25 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 26: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 26 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 27: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 27 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 28: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 28 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 29: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 29 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 30: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 30 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 31: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 31 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 32: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 32 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Page 5. Paragraph 33: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 33 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 34: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 34 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 35: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 35 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 36: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 36 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 37: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 37 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 38: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 38 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 39: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 39 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.

Paragraph 40: the archive stores what you read, not what a service allows you to see. Files are the truth; indexes are disposable. Rest stop notes, canal walks, and heron counts 40 belong to the reader who saved them, in a folder that outlives any account.